"9-1-1: When to go to the ER, Urgent Care or Primary Care"

If you cut yourself while making dinner and can't stop the bleeding, should you go to the emergency department or an urgent care clinic? What if you have chest pain? Find out how type and cost of care differ at an ER, walk-in clinic, and your doctor's office and learn about options and trends in emergency treatment.

Peter Weimersheimer, M.D.'95 is a professor of surgery and alumnus of the Larner College of Medicine at the University of Vermont, who joined the UVM faculty in 2012. He completed an internal medicine internship at UVM, followed by a residency in emergency medicine at Boston Medical Center and a fellowship in ultrasound at the Ultrasound Leadership Academy. A point-of-care ultrasound specialist, Weimersheimer is the director of the UVM Medical Center Emergency Medicine Residency Ultrasound Program and served as chief of emergency medicine from 2014-2017. He received the John H. Davis Award from the UVM Medical Center Department of Surgery in 2015. Currently, Weimersheimer is working to develop a regional point-of-care ultrasound program designed to improve patient care at all emergency departments within the UVM Health Network.

NOTES

View this presentation and previous Community Medical School lectures here:

http://med.uvm.edu/cms_archives